

WORKBOOK—SECTION FOUR

Your SEEK Story Framework

Use this section to build the narrative context for a learning project. SEEK grounds your learner in meaning before asking for effort.

The Story Foundation

16. What is the name of your learning project — course, program, training, coaching relationship, or curriculum?

The name of this learning project that we are working on this week in computer science is called Kairova.

17. Who is the central character of this story? (The learner themselves, a fictional user, a professional persona, etc.)

The central character of this story in this world is Deante Adam Johnson.

18. What challenge or problem does this character face at the beginning? Be specific and vivid.

At the beginning of his journey he faces many different problems such as extraterrestrials and many environmental challenges.

19. What does the world look like once this character has successfully completed the learning journey?

The world is seen to be a little more peaceful and safer for the future to come.

The Narrative Arc

20. Write a 2-3 sentence story opener you could use to begin your course, session, program, or module. Make it personal and specific.

It all began on a rainy Wednesday night in the month of October. Deante and his crew set to leave to go handle some business outside of camp. As they left they all looked at the camp for what it seemed to be for the last time.

21. How will you weave this story throughout the material? Describe 2-3 places where the narrative will resurface.

The narrative will seem to resurface every time they have to make a decision between saving a comrade or going on with the mission as well as every person they run into seeking shelter.
